Children can benefit a lot by helping out at home. Doing chores helps children learn skills they can use in their adult lives, like preparing meals, cleaning the house or doing the garden. Being involved in chores also gives children experience of relationship skills like communicating clearly or working as a team. It also allows them to feel valued and competent. And sharing housework can also help families work better and reduce family stress. When children help out, chores get done quicker and parents have less to do. This frees up time for the family to do fun things together. As a result, family life is more pleasant when everyone shares the chores.

It's best to start by choosing chores that work for children's ages and abilities. Getting children into the habit of doing housework can begin as young as the age of three, by asking them to put away their toys when they've done playing with them. Older children can help with setting the table, cleaning, cooking and so on. Teenagers can help with preparing or cooking dinner, babysitting their younger siblings or shopping for groceries. However, there are some children who are motivated to do chores for pocket money. It might not be a good idea. Instead of linking chores to pocket money, parents can praise children's positive behaviours and give them small rewards like choosing the TV programmes or having a special meal.

Question 26: What is the main idea of the first paragraph?

- A. Parents should teach children to do housework.
- B. There are many advantages of children sharing housework.

Independence is a fundamental aspect of personal growth and self-determination. It refers to the ability to make decisions, take actions, and assume responsibility for one's own life without relying excessively on others. Independence encompasses both physical and emotional autonomy, allowing individuals to navigate life on their own terms and pursue their goals and aspirations.

In terms of physical independence, it involves being self-sufficient and capable of meeting one's basic needs without relying on external assistance. This includes tasks such as managing finances, taking care of daily chores, and being able to provide for oneself. Physical independence empowers individuals to live independently, make their own choices, and take control of their lives. Emotional independence, on the other hand, relates to having a strong sense of self and being able to regulate one's emotions and well-being without depending on others for validation or support. It involves cultivating self-confidence, resilience, and the ability to make decisions based on personal values and beliefs. Emotional independence allows individuals to maintain healthy relationships, set boundaries, and assert their needs and desires.

While independence is highly valued, it is important to acknowledge that no one is entirely independent. We are social beings who thrive on connections and interdependence with others. Interactions and collaborations with family, friends, and communities contribute to our growth and well-being. However, striking a balance between independence and interdependence is crucial. It allows individuals to maintain their autonomy and make decisions that align with their values, while also fostering healthy relationships and recognizing the importance of mutual support.

It refers to the ability to make decisions, take actions, and assume responsibility for one's own life without relying excessively on others. Independence encompasses both physical and emotional autonomy, allowing individuals to navigate life on their own terms and pursue their goals and aspirations.

In terms of physical independence, it involves being self-sufficient and capable of meeting one's basic needs without relying on external assistance. This includes tasks such as managing finances, taking care of daily chores, and being able to provide for oneself. Physical independence empowers individuals to live independently, make their own choices, and take control of their lives. Emotional independence, on the other hand, relates to having a strong sense of self and being able to regulate one's emotions and well-being without depending on others for validation or support. It involves cultivating self-confidence, resilience, and the ability to make decisions based on personal values and beliefs. Emotional independence allows individuals to maintain healthy relationships, set boundaries, and assert their needs and desires.

While independence is highly valued, it is important to acknowledge that no one is entirely independent. We are social beings who thrive on connections and interdependence with others. Interactions and collaborations with family, friends, and communities contribute to our growth and well-being. However, striking a balance between independence and interdependence is crucial. It allows individuals to maintain their autonomy and make decisions that align with their values, while also fostering healthy relationships and recognizing the importance of mutual support.

Vietnam's population is ageing quickly. In 2017, more than 10 per cent of the population will be 60 and older, and in 15-20 years the elderly will account for one third of the total population. This raises concerns about healthcare, welfare and pensions for the elderly at a time when Vietnam is focusing on economic integration and requires a large labor force. So far two solutions have been proposed: to loosen the two-child policy and to increase the retirement age to 58 for women and 62 for men. By ending the two-child policy the government expects to make up for the ageing population within the next 20 years. But its effect could be creating an uncontrollable boom in the Vietnamese population. When the government loosened the two-child policy in 2015 in a trial period, in the first 6 months of 2016 the third child birth rate increased remarkably by 7.5 per cent.

Raising the retirement age has been proposed by the Ministry of Labor pending parliamentary evaluation in May 2017. While the policy is beneficial in utilizing the work experience of the elderly while creating savings in the pension budget, it also means fewer job prospects and promotion opportunities for younger generations. It is also not in the interest of all the elderly, especially the 70 per cent of Vietnam's labor force working in manual labor-intensive sectors such as agriculture, manufacturing and construction where working above the age of 50 can be dangerous and unproductive. Despite these drawbacks, raising the retirement age is still considered by policymakers as one of the key solutions to the ageing population problem in Vietnam. However, these are only temporary solutions.
